

Correlated disorder by design

Andrew Goodwin, University of Oxford

This talk will explore some of the design principles available to the materials chemist that allow control over the presence and nature of correlated disorder in crystalline materials. Its emphasis will be on (i) the role of electronic degrees of freedom, (ii) the use of advanced scattering methods in characterizing correlated disorder, and (iii) the link to materials properties.